Hello,

I was hoping to follow up on the Seal Shield matter. Has anything been done? Or is it still on-going?

Thanks in advance for your response.

Thanks, Mr. Broumand.

We are still looking into Seal Shield and other "antimicrobial" keyboards, articles and devices being marketed with public health claims. I'm sorry I can't tell you anything more helpful than that.

Subject: New SS website

Dear Ms. Trivedi,

SS has launched an updated website. They are making claims about their keyboards being antimicrobial in conjunction with different health claims.

"Seal Shield is the leading developer of medical keyboards that are waterproof and antimicrobial, the two most critical components for effective medical keyboards. Seal Shield's waterproof keyboards are 100% waterproof, so they can be cleaned with sprays or wipes without ever being disconnected or powered down. Seal Shield waterproof keyboards are fully washable. They can be soaked in bleach, washed in a sink or even cleaned in an automatic dishwasher. Seal Shield's waterproof keyboards are independently certified to IP-68, which is the highest rating against dust, debris and liquid ingress, signifying that Seal Shield's keyboards are waterproof and fully submersible."

This type of claim is found all over their website. I am getting frustrated that I have to fight this over and over. Will anything be done about SS breaking EPA rules and regulations?

I look forward to your response.
